ATELIER

DU GRAND PARIS

L'Atelier international du Grand Paris (AIGP) is an association of public and private organisations. It was created in February 2010 by the initiative of Nicolas Sarkozy. The Mission of this 'atelier' is to lead the research around and for le Grand Paris. The culture of the project is to rethink the city at a metropolitan scale. The role of the AIGP is to extend research and action at this scale. It relies on a scientific council formed by fifteen multidisciplinary teams of the international consultation lead by architects and urban planners.

The thematic question 'Comment habiter le Grand Paris?' is raised by the AIGP in response to the governmental ambition to construct 70.000 new homes annually, concentrated around the future Grand Paris Express metro line. 'Habiter les intermédiaires' is a controversial response for a more diffusive housing distribution (relocated the couronne verte) to provoke a discussion on the essence of 'sustainability' in the compact city-ideology.
